David Faris, “Dissent and Revolution in a Digital Age: Social Media, Blogging and Activism in Egypt”

Monday, Nov 18, 2013
5pm
UCSD Lit Bldg
Rm 155
(de Certeau Room)

David Faris is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the Roosevelt University, Chicago. In addition to his post in the Political Science & Public Administration department, he is the director of Roosevelt’s interdisciplinary International Studies Program. Farris earned his PhD in Political Science at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia in 2010. His book, Dissent and Revolution in a Digital Age: Social Media, Blogging and Activism in Egypt, published in 2013, focuses on the use of digital media by Egyptian opposition movements. His academic work has been published in Middle East Policy, Arab Media & Society and Politique Etrangère, and he has published op-eds with NPR.org, the Christian Science Monitor, the Daily News Egypt, the Philadelphia Citypaper, the Philadelphia Inquirer and more.